One other option is to consider painting the external tank white. Remember it was white for the first couple of shuttle flights. Of course for the white to be accurate you would need to build the orbiter as "Columbia" or you could build it as the "Enterprise" which did sit at Pad 39A during tests in 1978 or 1979.

Painting shuttle external tank models - space history

One of the most impressive things I have ever seen was the launch of a Space Shuttle, almost 20 years ago. It was one of those moments where the actual event - it only takes a few minutes for the shuttle to go out of sight after lift-off - was as great as the anticipation to witness it.

After a few hours (to be on the safe side), I applied the first Black Magic masks from Cutting Edge for the 1/72 Space Shuttle set, these to mask off the gray wing leading edges. With these in place, I sprayed on two coats of gloss white. Once again the paint was dry to the touch within minutes, but it remained a bit tacky for several hours.

After the initial two Shuttle flights, NASA determined 600 pounds could be shaved from the tank's launch weight by no longer coating the tank in white latex paint. Instead, the orange spray-on foam used to insulate the super cold propellants is left bare." This confirms the 600 lb answer and also states that "white latex paint" was used.
